The screenshot shows a website interface for finding suppliers. At the top, it says "List of Suppliers (80)". Below this is a search bar with "Brake Fluid" entered. Underneath is an "ADVANCED SEARCH" section with filters for "BY NAME", "BY COUNTRY", and "BY STATE". The main content area is titled "Featured Companies" and shows "28 results". The first result is for "920ENGINEERING", which is part of the "SHIFTEC" group. The description mentions they are a brake and control system supplier. To the right of the company name, there are buttons for "SUPPLIER", "Leamington Spa (United Kingdom)", and "website". Below the description, there are several tags for different brake components: "Air Shifters", "Brake Calipers", "Brake Components", "Brake Discs", "Brake Fluid", "Brake Hats", "Brake Lines", "Brake Mounting Brackets", "Brake Pads", and "Brake Proportioning Valves". At the bottom right of the company listing, there are buttons for "SAVE TO MY LIST" and "GO TO COMPANY". A red arrow points from the "Brake Fluid" tag to a banner ad on the right. The banner ad is for "halo. P1 SPECIALIST RACING BRAKE FLUID" and features the text "BE THE LAST OF THE LATE BRAKERS". The banner also includes the website "halobyorthene.com" and a "LEARN MORE" button.

Given the conditions it endures, the choice of material for your exhaust system is crucial. It must be able to withstand extreme temperatures and exposure to the elements, so it has to be strong and durable. At the same time, the exhaust tubing needs to be easy enough to bend and weld into different shapes and lengths.

For most street and performance applications, steel is the metal of choice. But not all steels are created equal. That's why understanding their relative strengths and limitations can go a long way in helping you choose the right grade for your aftermarket exhaust system. With that in mind, let's take a closer look at a trio of the most frequently used materials: Aluminized Steel, 409 Stainless Steel, and 304 Stainless Steel.

Aluminized Steel: The most affordable of the three, aluminized steel also is easier to work with than stainless steel. An aluminum-silicon alloy coating helps protect it from rust, but if it gets scratched or damaged the underlying steel becomes susceptible to corrosion. You also need to watch for internal rusting, which happens most often when moisture builds up inside the exhaust in cold temperatures and the vehicle isn't running long enough for it to evaporate. The durability of aluminized steel exhausts may vary significantly by location: In moderate climates, you can expect a lifespan of 3-5 years, while in drier areas it may last upwards of 8 years.

409 Stainless Steel: This is the material of choice for most modern factory exhaust systems. It strikes a balance between cost and longevity, generally lasting between 8-10 years in moderate climates. It's not as expensive as the higher-grade 304 stainless steel but does compromise slightly on toughness and corrosion resistance. It's predominantly (up to 90%) iron, which means it can develop surface rust. But this can be cleaned with a wire brush to maintain its functionality. However, once 409 stainless steel loses its luster, it can't be polished back to its original finish. Despite this, it still offers better rust resistance than aluminized steel.
